

Communication Law Review

A biannual publication of the Freedom of Speech Division of the Southern States Communication Association

The Communication Law Review originally began publication in 1983; the journal has recently revived its commitment to the proposition that freedom of speech is essential to the relevance of every aspect of the communication discipline.

Communication Law Review is still dedicated to that proposition but has also expanded to include a broader range of concerns at the intersection of communication and law through a varied of methods to include historical, theoretical, rhetorical and legal methods.

Recent articles have focused on legal communication, Congressional arguments, copyright concerns, communication in the practice of law, censorship issues, legislative impact in family communication, and much more.

Recent Publications Include:

From Nationalism to Migrancy: The Politics of Asian American Transnationalism
by Kent A. Ono, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign

The Rhetorical Construction of Justice and Money in Citizens Bank v. Strumpf
by Irwin Mallin, Indiana-Purdue Fort Wayne

Attorney Eye Contact and Control In the Courtroom: Act I
By Philip J. Aust, Kennesaw State University

To Find More Information:

The latest issue archives can be found at the Communication Law Review's new website:

www.commlawreview.org

Submissions for Volume Six are currently being accepted until December, 2006.

For any further information, please contact:

David R. Dewberry, Editor
Communication Law Review
ddewberr@du.edu
University of Denver